What is the North Carolina Association of Professional Loggers?

Loggers are independent business people separated from each other by the nature of their work and often kept apart from business information and timely news that could change their operations for the better.

The NCAPL is a non-profit corporation formed to help associate loggers for their benefit. Coming together through the Internet, by fax, by phone, and in person is easier in an association of like-minded business people who share similar problems and opportunities. The NCAPL employees a full-time Executive Director who keeps information timely, focuses on "survival" business issues , goes frontline with government agencies in cooperative efforts and lobbys for NCAPL members in the state legislature. As a "professional loggers" association, members are required to be in "good standing" with the N.C. ProLogger Program or another state certified logger program.

Why Should My Logging Business Join?

You will be among like-minded business members who support a multi-million dollar wood products industry in N.C. What better way to support your family and employees in their hard work by staying in touch with other NCAPL members and benefiting from the eyes and ears of the NCAPL watching out for your interests. You will be represented in the state legislature, with state agencies, and will have access to business information and current affairs that will improve your decision making.

The NCAPL is affiliated with the American Loggers Council that has over 10,000 members and direct impact at the national level.
